We have your requests, and we are working on them. You have a number of outstanding requests, and each additional one you submit requires us to devote an increasing portion of our staff resources to processing them. We also have a large number of CPRA requests from other sources in the queue as well. We have so many of them that in order to move all of these out the door in an expedited or even timely fashion we would need to take staff away from their jobs serving our constituents and devote them exclusively to processing these requests. That is not reasonable, and we don't believe it was ever the intent of CPRA to make our service to our constituents suffer.

That said, we are trying hard to process your requests as quickly as we can. We ask for your patience.

Thanks.

I would like to think that CD11's lack of response is inadvertent, although it's increasingly harder to assume that it is, rather than a reaction to any use I may have made of the small amount of material with which you did supply me
